The Union of Gov. Slavens saw Classes was effected today and we all recited together at twelve in the College Library. The Class is now composed of James E. Caldwel, John S. Bridgers, Wm. E. Hunt, James H. Lancaster, P. Don Wilson and myself. The recitation was on the first two chapters of the Second Book, and hereafter we are to write on every Monday and Friday. I shall apply myself most diligently to these lessons, and strain every nerve to acquire a complete mastery of all that we take up this session. I think that with the Governor's assistance I can do this and lay the foundation for a superstructure of eminent legal attainments. To be a good lawyer is one of my aims and I do not think that the labour requisite to attain it will be too great for me to sustain. At least, I shall not be deterred from making the experiment with all my strength by any fears on the subject.

The Loan Bill came up again being reported by the Committee of Correspondence. They only brought borrowed $140 from Dr. Mitchell intending to borrow the money in the hand of the Sub-Treasurer but he refused to lend it, instructing them to pay the money in his hands over to the Treasurer.
