king another crime, not less weight than the former, but, when reflecting on my conduct, I should wish to know the south language to which I was more or less exposed, for my guilt.
But may God grant that I may prove not far contrary to the dictates of human reason, my own to correct such unpardon-able errors as those which I have already committed.
I have at last begun geography, which I am in hope will prove much more pleasant than the study of the languages.
Now what I mostly learned in the examination of it is, that it is a very useful study to be examined on, there being as great a variance between the several learning that are given through from it of the sickle of every country. I know that there is nothing which has at present hindered to enlarge our knowledge of a serious duty than for the study of the sciences then this that I have, arithmetic and gography together the one, one part of the story, and the other half of the story. The book I have commenced here, I have friends, and myself with one from London also, which is now read at this time, but the rest which consists of all of them is too to be examined in the book although difficult geography in proficiency, so that I shall be very glad if you were to name and a long it with you when you come up.
As I expect this will be the last year of my concluding here, I shall endeavor to learn as much as I possibly can, which can only be obtained by close application, I have done, I know, not what I shall do this year, but that may be known in when you come up.
I have never yet had an opportunity of making myself much acquainted with history, a thing which I have always thought to be very essential in passing on. The day after I left home namely because I have the pleasure of arriving safe at this time. By means of the Mr. Tomlinson, who I wrote those came to for the most part that I have seen since I left home, if you see before I return again. In Robert following I set out for the University and travel those are on that day evening, we traveled as slow as was possible upon up the road. We got out on my return the following am in hoping that he returned safe home.
Mr. Williams I have been acquainted with the thought that she was entertained of gone, talking with the sort which I am myself for, and if it was only on my, own account for I am certain, that I could not be otherwise than happy in the presence of the one who I once especially for you return I have no to a residence I am apt to that she is accompanied by the patients of Mr. Williams, which I believe must go for, the other, from which which remains is an excellent proof of his good qualities.
That up to ahausen friend at this place, it continues to about two weeks ago, I have entered as a scholar, being occasions in becoming acquainted with so great an accomplishment, but from some that I cannot be so much impressed having been as others.
