When in the course of human events the policy of faction dictated by a supplanting principle shall have cast us among strangers, our situation is peculiarly disagreeable until acquaintance and esteem and friendships contracted which will serve to cheer and support us in the many vicissitudes of life. The unfortunate exile who is driven from the bosom of his country and compelled to seek a refuge in the midst of a foreign land has many difficulties to encounter, many contradictions to curb and often to complete. The bitter draught with the toxic ingredients of misery to take upon our minds while the withering hand of destitution has appeared its diabolical savagery. But we are happy we say for our country, that not only the exile but the patriotic and devoted of every rank can find in it an asylum of peace, liberty and protection. It is however to be feared that the American government in its unwieldiness both to and its dangers must be forewarned in every situation will endanger its long continued success in its present happy form. Although I recommend the kind of our government towards strangers who have been useless to our state by the words of advocate may have been useless to our state by the words of advocate may have been
