With a few remarks upon your present in reference to your future situation I will conclude, and relieve you of your impatience. We are all probationers in this world and know not what the Divine providence has in reserve for us. They view of this, like most others of the gifts of the Almighty, would perhaps incline us to the opinion, that the most of his bounties were of immaterial value. But conceive a person to have full and perfect presence of his future destiny, where should we search for those latent, heaven-born, principles, which stimulate human exertion to the achievements of grand and important designs? All you will admit will be extinct. It will cease to operate to make room for the entrance of luxury, folly and dissipation, if on one hand his fate were prosperous he would sink into a state of listless stupidity, if unfortunate how melancholy would succeed so that both would equally render him unfit to transact the business of society whether civil or domestic. What will apply in this case to individuals will evidently apply to nations. Thus we see the benevolence of God exemplified to his creatures in this, again every other case. Every man, is in some degree the author of his own fortune, and in order to succeed in life, he should acquire the necessary claims to the public favour. Let this stimulate your industry and perseverance, in every branch of improvement, within your power; conscious of the opportunities you enjoy and the responsibility which may devolve on
