or involves numerous young children, too young to work to support themselves, in need and in tolerate the disgrace or cast them to wander through the world with alone and to lead their set with shame and tending downwards to destrimation. These every day arguments though they be but few in number are suf- ficient to show that the subject is one of deep and abiding in- terest and that it behooves every man who has the well-being of humanity at heart, to labor the more to overcome the