have availed nothing. So, there was need of an active people, not only to proclaim, but the energy of a Tomp, a Young to carry into execution by their mighty arms that great principle of international law. So strong is the love of power and so agreeable the gratification of ambition that neither words nor turfs of grap' have any effect on the heart of the oppressor. Entreaties and lamentations cannot reach the heart of the tyrant for it is cased in steel. It takes the might of the strong man to pluck from him the recognition and respect due to the rights of man, and the law of nations. But the opposition seem to lay great stress upon the warrior as being a great scourge to humanity.
The warrior is one of the most important characters of a nation—he is the right-arm of the government. And it must be recollected that—chastisements are the greatest blessings, for it is said, whosoever the Lord loveth he chasteneth. Take Alexander who is always brought forward to illustrate the evils and
