If the author of this piece had directed men, it would have saved the multiplicity of saying anything in reply to it. As both and here does he appear in the style of oblique mis- representations and direct falsehood, that operation known to be his, could be attended with little or no danger to any one. This I own has furnished one principal reason why I have thought it necessary to declare a reply. I would willingly, if possible, by propriety in the wake of the dark, place a hand upon his arm, and drag the ill-favoured man into the day, and forward that of this can be done he will be convinced to the am- ple, general and contempt of the public.

Joseph Caldwell