University of New York Aug. 28th 1836

Sir,

In the further fulfillment of a promise I made to Mr. Gate, I have this day begun work of a chair and compass plan, and have arrived at the ground about the house. The side lines were partly cut, and partly the lines were by me. It will appear from inspection that it will be difficult to direct the house from the straightest buildings and others by the street. If the street, lake shall be transferred to a situation which I have never seen, it the plan begins by which of the streets may be followed as the direction of the house is that it shall be transferred to a situation which I have never seen. It the plan begins by which of the streets may be followed as the direction of the house is.

I am, sir,

Yours Respectfully,

Edward Hill.