gave who were not prepared to stand an examination on the Languages.

The four Professors should be required to give instruction not only in their particular departments, but according to some equal distribution in all the sciences belonging to a collegiate course. I think four Professors would make a complete faculty competent to the discharge of all these duties, unless it be found expedient hereafter to establish a Professorship of Law.

The Professors should be required to reside under the same roof with the students & such rules of discipline be established, as may be suitable for the advanced age of the young men—some under 18 being admitted.

It should be the object of the Professors to carry their pupils to the highest possible acquisitions in science — this would be greatly facilitated by the high degree of preparation required of the applicants for admission, & the opportunity afforded the Professors of devoting their whole time to their peculiar duties, whereas at present they must only have to begin at a low starting place, but are much impeded by a necessary attention to many anxious duties.

The details of this department need no particular enumeration any more than the other. The object would be to have a University of the highest grade, to accomplish which I conceive some such plan as this indispensable. The half grammar school & half college we have at present can never from the nature of things attain a character essentially different from the present.
