In your last letter you expressed some uncertainty respecting the place in which you would attempt the practice of physic. This, in a great measure prevented me from writing as often as I could wish. You see by my address that I am still a teacher though much against my inclination. It is difficult in this illiterate part of the United States to procure one person that is able and willing to undertake the arduous task of instruction. I continue in my present situation because the trustees...