Families are too well known to you and to the people of the State to need any explanation or comment. He has a family that must be expensive any where, but particularly in such a place as this, where the inhabitants, with whom he is obliged to be in habit of ceremony, appear to be of what themselves would call the highest order. Being on a road which is travelled more than any other in the U. States, his disposition disposes him, and his situation obliges him to receive and entertain, with much expense, visitors at all times. It is by no means necessary for me to inform you that the inhabitants of this place were never agreeable to him nor he to them. As to his health, he declares that he is seriously apprehensive of the effects of the next winter upon it—he has filled the office of assistant with more milderness than he did that of vice president. The wealth of this place would certainly be very unwilling to part with him.
