In passing in this society, do you to be a physician? clear concise accounts of the case which should happen to fall under your observation together with the treatment required by each will always prove acceptable to the public & will secure renumeration as well as innocence.
And no matter what profession you intend to enter, the spirit of the age is such as to make参观 as a great disgrace than learning.
Man rarely feels the world of those advantages which he enjoys until they have incurredly left, the sick man despaired slightly on the blessings of health, the statesman on the pleasures of retirement, & you will onlyLead after learn to appreciate fully the privileges which you now enjoy. But wonder that you may. never come benefit from them let me beg you to lay aside your childhood complacency. If feeling anxious that your own entirely are at stake and each other in the regular performance of your regular duties. Are you deficient? remember that Mr. Clay himself when he first rose was added a gritty debating society of which he was a member was decidedly the greatest blunder I most awkward member of which it boasted. Did he fall? not so - the virtues still adorn our age

His speech, his form, his action full of grace And all his country beaming on his face

As eye-reward or blaze that steals before As heart can but tremble when he rose announced his early efforts to distinguish himself. Do for fear the connections be assumed that if you intend to occupy a situation before the public these outlines on your style & delivery must be made, so that they will be proportionally severe according as they con
