indicated that that part of the ordinance should stand suspended and thereafter be the monetary an oath until the annual meeting; and that in lieu thereof the monetary should pledge their word of honor to perform their duties—The Vandevere was ate the modification they required, or at last was modifying the ordinance in a manner sufficient to their objection, and that the Trustees lost no time in sending up the amende-tory ordinance because new elementary were be approved the first of the present month.
They act for a month. Directly on the receipt of the ordinance they take it into their heads that no modification of the law have taken place. That there was not in fact any difference between a man wearing to do a thing and his promise to do it, and therefore they, the trustees would depart them selves from college, unless the Faculty of Trustees would consent to alter the monetary duties in a manner by which them, a plan of which they submitted to Mr. Baldwin. This decretal conduct was so novel and so unexampled that Mr. Baldwin could not allow to it a single minute, instead his ball to carry into execution the law of the institution absolutely forbade.