I am far from the subject. Prof. Hubbard was present, and I ask that the question be put whether my assertions are true or not.

"However, not very long since, on students burst on the professor in effigy, amidst the rails and shelters of three hundred and fifty young men, cleared by the glare of the funeral pile, to the music of their own yells and vivifications!"

It was Prof. Charles Phillips, on the 9th and 10th of October, 1855.

The fact itself is unquestionable. I apprehend, however, that I may have committed a lapsus memoriae, in giving the number of students. For instance, if 350, I understand there were only 330 on the hill; and it is barely probable they should all have been engaged in the riot. I have heard it said as one of the most formidable disturbances ever known here; and Mr. Lincoln tells me that he heard a sqair himself make remarks to that effect.

"How was it in the days of Dr. Caldwell?"

In this instance, I have followed the tradition; and if the galaxy I have cited does not suffice, I beg leave to appeal to my memory. For myself, Gentlemen, I have been a pupil of that worthy man.
